Jack's Reflection

For me, scouting is a way to connect with nature while getting to experience the world in a very unique way. Adventures such as hiking, climbing, backpacking, camping, horseback-riding, boating or just hanging out in basecamp, provided me with incredible experiences. What made these experiences even more valuable was the leadership and life skills I was able to attain in the process. These experiences and skills fostered my love of the outdoors and helped me become a successful student and leader in school and sports.

I would like to thank my loving and supportive parents for beginning and encouraging my long career in scouting. I would also like to thank all my scoutmasters, for their help along the way. I am grateful for my Troop 570 community!

Jack's Eagle Project

For my Eagle Project, I built barn owl nesting boxes for the local Eastside Audubon Society. As owl habitat is constantly lost to land development and deforestation, the native owl population of Western Washington becomes threatened. Because owls do not construct their own nests, nesting boxes can provide a safe place for owls to raise their young. When I heard that the Audubon Society was looking for volunteers willing to build these boxes to be installed in local parks, I jumped at the idea. I found this project attractive for many reasons, as I liked the idea of helping a local organization, as well as doing something that could benefit local parks and wildlife all at the same time.

Planning this project months in advance, I spent dozens of hours coordinating and designing the build process. With 16 volunteers and a total of 95 hours worked, we constructed sixteen 2' x 3' x 1.5' barn owl boxes from exterior grade plywood and coated them in weather proof paint. These boxes were distributed to members of the Audubon society for placement in wooded areas and local parks. They will provide nesting space and habitat for barn owls for years to come, helping to protect an endangered population.

Special thanks to my father and Eagle project advisor, Dale Nussbaum, as well as to my supporting scoutmasters and volunteers of Troop 570.
