Arden's Eagle Project

For my Eagle Project, I designed and installed a 60-foot long stone-tile pathway at the Woodinville Montessori School in Bothell. Previously there was no sidewalk next to the school and students would run across the parking lot in route to the soccer field, sprinting every which way, quick and unpredictable to oncoming traffic.

Planning this project almost three months in advance, I've spent over 25 hours preparing for the creation of the pathway. All this wouldn't be possible without Mr. Lane, my Eagle Project Advisor. His experience made this daunting project easier and thankfully we finished this project in one day.

To complete the walkway, we had to dig down two inches into the dirt and then fill it up with gravel and mason sand. Next we placed 146 18"x18" stone tiles onto the sand, fill the cracks and crevasses with Poly sand, and then compact the tiles with a plate compactor. Nine hours later, we finished. 34 volunteers, 235 hours, and $2,513.40 --- all for one stone-tile pathway. However, this wasn't just Silicon Dioxide mixed with feldspar, quartz, mica, and amphibole minerals.

This was a haven for the students. This was my gift to the school. This was my Eagle Project.

Cody's Eagle Project

My Crew

One of the fondest memories of my youth was being able to participate in my elementary school's "study buddy" annual plant sale, which helped develop our gardening and entrepreneurial skills. I only sought it fair to give back to such a program later on in life, and so I designed and built four large cold-frames for Moorlands Elementary School.

With 22 volunteers and a total of 129 hours worked, we were able to construct permanent cold frames for use by the elementary school students which would serve to enrich their education on food cultivation and plant anatomy. In addition to the cold frames, we were able to conduct some landscaping with a generous donation from Dale Nussbaum at the Nussbaum Group. The site is now currently used by the school's study buddy program and provides them with a longer growing season for their plants.

Special thanks to Mark Mayberry, Deborah Fullerton, Michelle Wytko, and my loving, supportive parents for their help and dedication!
